A Message from the State Board of Education and the State Superintendent of Public Instruction

With the adoption of these English–language arts content standards in 1997, California set forth for the first time a uniform and specific vision of what students should know and be able to do in this subject area. Reflecting a strong consensus among educators, these standards establish high expectations for all students. They embody our collective hope that all students become effective language users so that they can succeed academically, pursue higher education, find challenging and rewarding work, participate in our democracy as informed citizens, appreciate and contribute to our culture, and pursue their own goals and interests throughout their lives.

Standards create a vision of a comprehensive language arts program.

Before the creation of content standards, school reform efforts were guided by the desire to improve student achievement without agreement as to the content of that achievement. These standards set forth the content that students need to acquire by grade level. At every grade level the standards cover reading, writing, written and oral English language conventions, and listening and speaking. Grade by grade, the standards create a vision of a balanced and comprehensive language arts program.

Knowledge acquisition is a part of literacy development.

Reading, writing, listening, and speaking are related processes, which should be nurtured within a rich core curriculum. Literacy competencies are the gateways to knowledge across the disciplines. Prior knowledge is the strongest predictor of a student's ability to make inferences about text, and writing about content helps students acquire knowledge. Thus, literacy and the acquisition of knowledge are inextricably connected. Educators should take every opportunity to link reading and writing to other core curricula, including history, social science, mathematics, science, and the visual and performing arts, to help students achieve success in all areas.

Standards are central to literacy reforms.

The standards continue to serve as the centerpiece of language arts reform in California. They continue to provide a focus for the development of documents such as the Reading/Language Arts Framework and literacy handbooks; criteria used for the selection of textbooks; the language arts portions of tests used in state assessments; and an array of professional development activities. Just as the standards drive numerous statewide initiatives, they are also being used extensively throughout California as teachers and administrators strengthen local programs and create schoolwide literacy programs to meet the needs of all students.

Standards describe what, not how, to teach.

Standards-based education maintains California's tradition of respect for local control of schools. To help students achieve at high levels, local school officials, literacy and library leaders, and teachers—in collaboration with families and community partners—are encouraged to continue using these standards to evaluate and implement the best and most powerful practices. These standards provide ample room for the innovation, creativity, and reflection essential to teaching and learning.

Standards help to ensure equity and access for all.

The diversity of California's students presents both opportunities and challenges for instruction. Language and literacy growth begins before children enter school as they learn to communicate, listen to stories, look at books, and play with other children. Students come to school with a wide variety of abilities and interests, as well as varying proficiency in English and other languages. The vision guiding these standards is that all students must have the opportunities, resources, time, and support needed to achieve mastery. Literacy is a gateway skill, opening a world of possibilities to students. Our goal is to ensure that every student graduating from high school is prepared to transition successfully to postsecondary education and careers. These standards represent our commitment to excellence for all children.

Introduction

The English–Language Arts Content Standards for California Public Schools, Kindergarten Through Grade Twelve represents a strong consensus on the skills, knowledge, and abilities that all students should be able to master in language arts at specific grade levels during 13 years in the California public school system. Each standard describes the content students need to master by the end of each grade level (kindergarten through grade eight) or cluster of grade levels (grades nine and ten and grades eleven and twelve). In accordance with Education Code Section 60603, as added by Assembly Bill 265 (Chapter 975, Statutes of 1995), the Leroy Greene California Assessment of Academic Achievement Act, there will be performance standards that define various levels of competence at each grade level and gauge the degree to which a student has met the content standards that are measured.

The Reading/Language Arts Framework for California Public Schools (California Department of Education, 1999) aligns the curriculum and instructional program to the English–Language Arts Content Standards. The framework serves as a guide for teachers, administrators, parents, and other support personnel on when to introduce knowledge and how to sustain the practice of skills leading all students to mastery. It also provides ways in which to assess and monitor student progress; design systematic support and intervention programs; and encourage parent involvement. In addition, the framework identifies instructional and student resources; promotes professional development; and suggests strategies for improving communication between school, home, and community. Finally, the framework addresses the delivery of content-rich curriculum to special-needs students, especially English learners, students with disabilities, and learners at risk of failure.

An Essential Discipline

The ability to communicate well—to read, write, listen, and speak—runs to the core of human experience. Language skills are essential tools not only because they serve as the necessary basis for further learning and career development but also because they enable the human spirit to be enriched, foster responsible citizenship, and preserve the collective memory of a nation.

Students who read well learn the tempo and structure of language early in their development. They master vocabulary, variance in expression, and organization and skill in marshaling evidence to support an idea. National Institutes of Health studies indicate that students who are behind in reading in grade three have only a 12 to 20 percent chance of ever catching up.

Fluent Readers and Skilled Writers

Students must read a broad variety of quality texts to develop proficiency in, and derive pleasure from, the act of reading. Students must also have experience in a broad range of writing applications, from the poetic to the technical.

Musicians cannot compose concertos (or play those composed by others) without first learning the scales and practicing them as well as reading and playing the music of the great composers who have survived the test of time. The same is true of young readers and writers and their relationships with the great writers who have preceded them.

Reading and writing technical materials, moreover, are critical life skills. Participation in society—filling out forms, voting, understanding the daily newspaper—requires solid reading and writing competencies. Similarly, most jobs demand the abilities to read and write well. Collegiate and technical courses generally require a high level of proficiency in both abilities. In an emergency, reading and writing with speed and accuracy may literally mean the difference between life and death.

Reading and writing offer the power to inform and to enlighten as well as to bridge time and place. For example, interpreting and creating literary texts help students to understand the people who have lived before them and to participate in, and contribute to, a common literary heritage. Through literature, moreover, students experience the unique history of the United States in an immediate way and encounter many cultures that exist both within and beyond this nation's borders. Through reading and writing students may share perspectives on enduring questions, understand and learn how to impart essential information, and even obtain a glimpse of human motivation. Reading and writing offer incomparable experiences of shared conflict, wisdom, understanding, and beauty.

In selecting both literary and informational texts for required reading and in giving writing assignments (as well as in helping students choose their own reading and writing experiences), local governing boards, schools, and teachers should take advantage of every opportunity to link that reading and writing to other core curricula, including history, social science, mathematics, and science. By understanding and creating literary and technical writing, students explore the interrelationships of their own existence with those of others.

Students need to read and write often, particularly in their early academic careers. Reading and writing something of literary or technical substance in all disciplines, every day, both in and out of school, are the principal goals of these standards.

Confident Speakers and Thoughtful Listeners

Speaking and listening skills have never been more important. Most Americans now talk for a living at least part of the time. The abilities to express ideas cogently and to construct valid and truthful arguments are as important to speaking well as to writing well. Honing the ability to express defensible reflections about literature will ensure comprehension and understanding. Not long ago listening and speaking occupied central places in the curriculum, but only a few schools have maintained this tradition. The time has come to restore it.

English Learners

Approximately 25 percent of students in California are English learners. The standards in this document have been designed to encourage the highest achievement of every student. No student is incapable of reaching them. The standards must not be altered for English learners, because doing so would deny these students the opportunity to reach them. Rather, local education authorities must seize this chance to align specialized education programs for English learners with the standards so that all children in California are working toward the same goal. Administrators must also work very hard to deliver the appropriate support that English learners will need to meet the standards.

A Comprehensive Synergy

Reading, writing, listening, and speaking are not disembodied skills. Each exists in context and in relation to the others. These skills must not be taught independently of one another. Rather, they need to be developed in the context of a rich, substantive core curriculum that is geared not only toward achieving these standards per se but also toward applying language arts skills to achieve success in other curricular areas. The good news is that reading, writing, listening, and speaking are skills that invariably improve with study and practice. Mastery of these standards will ensure that children in California enter the worlds of higher education and the workplace armed with the tools they need to be literate, confident communicators.

Glossary

active voice	A verb form in which the subject of the verb carries out some action. Example: He hit the ball.
affix	A bound (nonword) morpheme that changes the meaning or function of a root or stem to which it is attached, such as the prefix ad- and the suffix -ing in adjoining .
alliteration	The repetition of the same sound, usually of a consonant, at the beginning of two or more words immediately succeeding each other or at short intervals. Example: The repetition of f and g in fields ever fresh, groves ever green
alphabetic principle	The assumption underlying alphabetic writing systems that each speech sound or phoneme of a language should have its own distinctive graphic representation.
analogy	A resemblance in some particulars between things otherwise unlike.
anecdotal scripting	The systematic recording of behavioral incidents cited in a literary work for purposes of organization and clarity.
annotated bibliography	The inclusion of additional comments in the works listed in the standard bibliography.
antecedent	A word, phrase, or clause to which a following pronoun refers. Example: Iris tried, but she couldn't find the book. Iris is the antecedent of she. appeal to reason	A call upon the reader's faculty to think in a rational way to persuade his or her thoughts.
appeal to authority	A call upon an individual or other source as an expert to strengthen an argument made by the author of a work.
appeal to emotion	The ad populum approach is a common fallacy in arguments. Instead of presenting evidence in an argument, it relies on expressive language and other devices calculated to incite enthusiasm, excitement, anger, or hatred.

appeal to pathos (pity)	A common fallacy in arguments, the ad misericordiam approach is a special case of the appeal to emotion in which the altruism and mercy of the audience are the special emotions to which the speaker appeals.
appositive	A word or phrase that restates or modifies an immediately preceding noun. Note: An appositive is often useful as a context clue for determining or refining the meaning of the word or words to which it refers. Example: My son Enrico (appositive) is twelve years old.
archetypal criticism	The study of apparent perennial images, themes, symbols, stories, and myths in literature, including narratives that unite the seasons with literary genres.
archetype	The original pattern or model of which all things of the same type are representations or copies; a perfect example.
attack ad hominem	An attack “against the man”; a fallacious attack in which the thrust is directed, not at the conclusion one wishes to deny, but at the person who asserts or defends it.
bandwagon	A popular party, faction, or cause that attracts growing support; a current or fashionable trend.
base word	A word to which affixes may be added to create related words. Example: Teach in reteach or teaching .
blend	A combination of sounds represented by letters to pronounce a word; sounding out the joining of the sounds represented by two or more letters with minimal change in those sounds, such as the consonant cluster in /gr/ in grow , /spl/ in splash .
boundary	A division between units of a language, such as between words, word parts, or syllables.
climax	The point of highest dramatic tension or a major turning point in the action (such as in a play, story, or other literary composition).
clustering	A content field technique or strategy to help students freely associate ideas in their experience with a keyword proposed by the teacher, thus forming a group of related concepts; a teaching process of relating a target word to a set of synonyms and other word associations. Note: Clustering may be used to stimulate the recall of related ideas in reading and writing, especially in prewriting.
complement	The word (or words) that completes the action in the predicate of a sentence; to complete a grammatical construction in this way. Example: Tom is a policeman (complement).

compound sentence	A sentence consisting of two or more coordinate independent clauses. Example: George talked and Harry listened. concrete image	A literal representation of a sensory experience or of an object that can be known by more than one of the senses; representation that involves no necessary change or extension in the obvious meaning of the words; the words call up a sensory representation of the literal object or sensation.
consonant doubling	The addition of a consonant in the formation of some gerunds and participles. Example: Running. context clues	The information from the immediate textual setting that helps identify a word for decoding (sounding out) and words being read for the first time. The reader's speaking vocabulary is a back-up strategy and is primarily useful to resolve ambiguity (is bread pronounced bred or breed ?) and to confirm the accuracy of decoding (does it make sense and does it sound right?). The context helps resolve which shade of meaning is intended (prog-ress or pro-gress) and is used for learning the meaning of new words that can be decoded or pronounced but are not yet in the reader's speaking vocabulary; it is a primary strategy.
decoding	The ability and willingness to sound out words by generating all the sounds into a recognizable word (technically called phonological recoding). The ability to get the meaning of a word quickly, effortlessly, and unconsciously after a brief visual scan, such as in automaticity with individual words (which is the product of initial phonological decoding, followed by the reading of that word successfully several times, preferably in text, until the neural connections among the letters, the sounds, and the meaning of the word are fully established).
denouement	The final outcome of the main dramatic event in a literary work.
description	One of the four traditional forms of composition in speech and writing, it is meant to give a verbal picture of the character and event, including the setting.
digraphs	Two letters that represent one speech sound, such as ch for / ch / in chin or ea for / e / in bread .
discourse	A conversation; the act or result of making a formal written or spoken presentation on a subject; in linguistics, any form of oral or written communication more extensive than a sentence.
etymology	The history of words; the study of the history of words.

It may include limited amounts of argumentation, description, and narration to achieve that purpose.
expressive writing	Highly personal writing, such as in diaries, personal letters, and autobiographies.

Also two or more graphemes that represent the same sound. Example: The /k/ sound in /c/andy, k/ing, and s/ch/ool.
idiom	A use of words peculiar to a particular language.
initial consonants (initial blends)	The joining of two or more consonant sounds, represented by letters, that begin a word without losing the identity of the sounds, such as /bl/ in black , /skr/ in scramble ; the joining of the first consonant and vowel sounds in a word, such as /b/ and /a/ in baby . Note: This process is regarded by some to be a crucial step in learning phonics.

irregularity	An exception to a linguistic pattern or rule. Example: Good, better, and best are exceptions to the usual -er, -est pattern of comparatives and superlatives in English.
literary analysis	The study of a literary work by a critic, student, or scholar; a careful, detailed reading and report thereof.

nonverbal	A nonlanguage communication, such as a noise, gesture, or facial expression.
nonsense syllable	A pronounceable combination of graphic characters, usually trigrams, that do not make a word, such as kak, vor, mek , pronounced in English as spellings. Note: Nonsense syllables are sometimes used in reading to test phonics knowledge; they are sometimes used in spelling to test for desired syllabic patterns while avoiding known words.
onomatopoeia	The term used to describe words whose pronunciations suggest their meaning (e.g., meow, buzz).
oral histories	The stories and histories kept alive by the spoken word rather than the written word. Note: Although an oral tradition is characteristic of an oral culture, it may coexist in a writing culture.

orthography	The study of the nature and use of symbols in a writing system; correct or standardized spelling according to established usage in a given language.

phonemic awareness	The awareness of the sounds (phonemes) that make up spoken words. Such awareness does not appear when young children learn to talk; the ability is not necessary for speaking and understanding spoken language; however, phonemic awareness is important for learning to read. In alphabetic languages, letters (and letter clusters) represent phonemes; to learn the correspondences between letters and sounds, one must have some understanding of the notion that words are made up of phonemes.
phonics	A system of teaching reading and spelling that stresses basic symbol-sound relationships and their application in decoding words; a system used especially in beginning instruction.
phonogram	A graphic character or symbol that may represent a phonetic sound, phoneme, or word; in word recognition, a graphic sequence composed of a vowel grapheme and an ending consonant grapheme, such as -ed in red , bed , fed .
